one way of categorizing the choices facing us is between

- a) a big evolutionary game Flutterby
- b) a little private game butterfly caterpillar

I'm not here to convince you that one option is better than another. ^{} I choose a).

There are several issues/questions I find interesting: How do we deal with the choice between a) and b).

Having chosen a), how do we become more effective

* I see it more as an aesthetic than a "moral" choice It's a decision about what kind a world you want to live in.

 Maybe its possible to do more than one and give them both justice - I feel I must choose.

Illusions

1. ownership
2. that "I" is in control

It seems we are programmed to ignore certain features of the environment because they don't fit neatly into our reality tunnel/analysis/L. categories

This blindness is not unrelated to our failure to distinguish between map & territory — ~~our~~ we think there can be only one true map for a given territory.

The more I attempt to be conscious. the more conscious I become of just how unconscious I ^{really} am.

Maybe it's better to talk about how ~~my~~ definition of "conscious" changes as I become more conscious.
 At first, it's a word with many ambiguous meanings and many strong emotions/glandular reaction patterns. Later it becomes more "specific"/articulated/refined — not because I'm getting closer to THE truth — Because I'm getting closer to a truth & create/discover as an aesthetic object —
